

a)

- When you click on the "Forums" page the accordion widget displays the categories of posts (jQuery-UI widget).
- Click on a category on the "Forums" page, then click on a thread, and you are able to type in the comment box and hit the "Add Comment" button and the comment will be displayed (jQuery plugin).
- The AJAX load() method is used to load the navigation bar on all pages and the same method is used to load the footer on all pages. This method allows me to access and load data from one HTML file onto another.

b)

The suggestions I received from the peer review of my website were adding a "home" webpage and images to the pages. I did not make any changes regarding the home webpage because I think they were referring to adding a link to the homepage but when you click on the title of the website it returns the user back to the homepage. Additionally, I did not add any more images because I think the background images are enough imagery for a forum.

c)

The webpage does a good job meeting the needs of a mock pre-law forum but to continue future plans with the website I would need to learn back-end processing to implement more functionality on the website.